We are in the process of making precious metal purchases and we wanted to try a few companies to see who would offer better service and deliver quickly. Of the online services, this was the worst experience we've had. We figured to start off with a small, minimal purchase and see for ourselves which we would use for our larger purchases in the future. First off, we did read the fine print and we expected some delays but this is ridiculous. We sent them a check, they cashed it, it cleared, they held on to my money (the check cleared) for close to a month and could not tell us when the order would ship. Then I had to place the order on hold (because they had no idea when it would ship) and when we removed the hold, they still couldn't tell us when our order would ship. This practice doesn't seem right, I guess you have to be a big dollar buyer to get the service.

We have found a local brick and mortar shop that will clear our order after they cash our check and will also accept cash orders with a CC hold when we purchase. If you have a local dealer close by, I recommend using that option instead of larger places like Lear, unless you like to wait until your hair turns silver.

Lear is just another predator in the sea of ready prey that is right-wing radio and TV.

Note the threatening ads -- China is buying up US gold RIGHT NOW! This could be your LAST CHANCE to own physical gold, ever!

Note also the absurd product they offer - physical gold at a massive premium. If you really think that the world is going down in flames in the next couple of years, and that some physical gold is going to help you during that time, by all means, go nuts.

Note the change in tune depending on the situation. three years ago: "Gold is higher than ever and sure to rise!" Today: "Gold is at sub-market lows and sure to rise!" Unlike physical gold, there is no premium on accuracy.

They advertise on Beck, Limbaugh and Faux news for Chrissakes. Facts need not apply... just save me from those money grubbing Chinese (Muslims, Obama, gun control, Russians, apocalypse demons... whatever manufactured threat they're bandying about today)!

Lear currently offers (claims to offer) a paranoia-inducing "China Report," advertised often on Hate Radio. But go ahead, try calling, like I did. You will encounter high-pressure sales and if the rep thinks for even a moment that you are not going to "buy gold from us today" (their words, 5 or 6 times), get ready for the ol' hang up treatment. They will also demand your personal info. It's like they really care about just who you are. Gives you an important kind of feeling, no?

I was going to buy from Lear capital, gold polar Canadian .999 gold .25 oz coins. Joanne saw me as a beginner that didn't know the first thing about buying gold. Which is right, I was depending on her to help me invest in gold. She talked me into buying gold coins at $400.00 above the value per oz. I was able to talk to a family member that told me just because the coins had some collection value. Didn't make them worth what I was paying. I found a local dealer that charged $10.00 over the value for the day you buy on. So be careful when dealing with these company's that advertise on tv.

Ive purchased several silver polar bears from Lear over the past year and I've been very satisfied with their service. My representative is David Goodman and he usually calls me when silver dips. I recommend David as he is very knowledgeable of many products.

Do not do business with Lear Capital. They charged me

$800 over fair market value for a 1 ounce 1924 Gold coin. I learned that Lear charge me an excessive amount when I went to sell my coin. Lear said they would only pay me $1,688 for a coin they sold to me for $2,485 just 2 years earlier (when gold was $300 less per ounce). This obviously made no sense to me so I went to several local coins stores and they told me that I paid about $800 over market value for the coin from Lear Capital. I confirmed what the local coins stores owners told me by researching the same rated coins on Heritage Auctions (largest coin auction site). Local coin stores and Heritage Auctions typically have a premium of less than 10% versus the 45% premium that Lear Capital charged me which is 450% higher than local coin dealers. I will never purchase from Lear Capital again.
