JDI Dating Ltd PROTECTS KIDS:

We do all we can to protect children from adult websites. We take all measures we can to make using our service as safe as possible. To reach that goal, the information on this web page attempts to assist parents in understanding how to protect their children from inappropriate online material.

We recommend installing parental control software on your computer. You can find quality parental control software but conducting a basic Internet search. Some Internet Service Providers (also known as ISPs) provide content filtering or similar software controls as part of their basic services.

In essence, parental control software blocks access to specific websites and online content. Generally, most software supplies a list of websites that are inappropriate for children and you can update the software through the provider's website or, in some cases, the software will update automatically. You should also consider filtering software, which block sites based on keywords (e.g., "sex"). Note, filtering software generally does not automatically block access to adult-oriented material. You will likely have to configure the software to filter specific material.

If you have only one computer in your household, and you use the same computer as the children, you can set up the computer to filter content during certain hours, provide separate log in and password access, block personal information access and similar filtering and protection options.

Although you may attempt to block certain inappropriate content, you may also restrict access to legitimate sites. Certain keywords appear on legitimate news and information sites, which may require some testing with different settings when configuring the filter controls.

Remember that installing filtering software is no guarantee! Children may still be exposed to inappropriate material online. New websites pop up everyday, so it is critical to keep your software up to date and learn how your Internet browser software works in order to check the sites your family has visited (i.e., "History" feature, which displays a list of websites visited by the web browser).

Of course, sitting down and talking with your children about the possible dangers that exist on the Internet, and supervising their web surfing remain the best ways to protect them.

Here are some basic Internet-related safety points to you to protect your children (the list is not comprehensive):

- * Tell them to never give out personal information about themselves or their family to strangers they might meet online or in a chat room.
- * Remind them that online it is simple for people to pretend and disguise their true identity by easily changing their name, age and gender in an effort to get close to children.
- * Teach them that they should never meet a new online friend without an adult present.
- * Tell them to never give out their picture to a stranger, and that if they ever get a picture with sexual content, or something they find disturbing, that they should get off the computer immediately and tell a parent about it.
- * Let them know that if they encounter something or someone dangerous that you have an "open door" policy and that they can tell you about it, and that you will not blame them or get mad at them.
