The Immune System fights germs naturally and attempts to keep us well. Although there are masses of research indicating nutrition has a powerful effect on the immune system and health, all research is exposed to interpretation and contradictions. We cannot conclude in vitro studies (in the lab) will work in the human body as well. When analyzing in vivo studies (in the body) one must understand the nature of the study and products involved in order to draw a viable conclusion.

Remember even doctors have different opinions. Some doctors will endorse natural products for medical use while others won't. A possible placebo effect must be taken into consideration when reviewing testimonies. The preceding information is provided as a source of self education.

Research can be complicated to transfer into real life situations. Positive results achieved in short term by in vitro and in vivo studies do not take into account long-term side effects- which could be positive or negative. There are herbs and nutrients that can turn to be harmful if consumed in large dosages such as vitamin A. When consuming nutrients along with medical drugs you should check for possible drug interaction problems with a pharmacist. Occasionally there are medical doctors visiting our board and share their opinions and experiences. Although we believe these medical professionals are sincere, keep in mind that even doctors may disagree on certain subjects. It is our desire to expose many different ideas for your consideration. Our focus is on supporting the immune system which can assist your body staying healthy. The testimonies and information on this website represent the opinions of the individuals involved only. We encourage you to use your common sense in expectations of consuming any nutritional product.

The Immune System is one of our defense systems against diseases. The Immune System is the body's actual agent involved in healing or recovering from illness. There are nutrients we believe can support proper immune functions. Neither it is our intent to indicate nutrition can always cause the immune system to prevent all illnesses or any illness in particular. Nor is it our intent to indicate nutrition can always cause the immune system to heal in case we are ill. However- we do believe research indicates nutrition is important for a healthy and responsive Immune System. There is an abundance of research taking place throughout the world about nutrition and its effect on health. There is a great deal of conflicting opinions and research. We live in an exciting time and many of us want to benefit from all of the breakthrough research going on. At the same time we want to be wise in our approach to healthcare. On this website we attempt to provide educational information through studies, opinions and testimonies that will provide a variety of perspectives for your consideration. We do not necessarily endorse any particular perspective.

4Life: ON THE POSSIBILITY OF REDUCING BIOLOGICAL AGE USING TRANSFER FACTOR

Russian University of People's Friendship, Moscow, Russia National Gerontological Centre, Laboratory for Gerontology MGSU (Moscow State University of Dentistry), Moscow, Russia A.Ya. Chizhov, V.A. Santalova, V.N. Krut'ko, V.I.Dontsov

Immunological reactivity of people living in big cities is characterized by high occurrence of ecologically induced secondary immunodeficits. Irreversible changes in the immune system lead to exhaustion of reserves and development of a pathology. The close interaction is known between decline in functional activity of the immune system and the process of aging. Therefore it seems feasible to explore the influence of perspective immunomodulators on the parameters of the biological age.

There is a close link between the decrease of functional activity of the immune system and aging. Thus, we decided to study immunomodulators to determine to what extent they may affect biological age indices. A new immune theory of aging (V.I.Dontsov, V.N. Krut'ko, 2002) points to the role of specific T-lymphocytes subpopulations in sustaining a certain level of normal cellular growth in the body and dwells on the importance of their functional decrease having a strong impact on aging. Stimulation of the function of these cells by Transfer Factor (TF), an immunomodulator produced by 4Life, USA, seemed a plausible method of "treating aging". The evaluation of the role TF in the process of aging is at the basis of this study.

Twelve (12) men aged 55-73 were included in the study. A dose of 300 mg. of the TF product was given daily with meals 5 times a week for 6 weeks. Biological age was determined using the "APK" method ("Diagnostics of aging: biological age" (National gerontology center, Moscow)). The following biomarkers were used for making the determinations: AP (arterial pressure), pulse wave velocity, VC (vital pulmonary capacity), static balance, Shtange's test, adaptation testing, body mass, left hand strength, Shulte's test, Veksler's test, neuromuscular test, hearing frequency threshold and the SAN's questionnaire. The functional activities of body systems were evaluated by means of Nakatani's electropuncture diagnostics. Chronological age of the group was 63.5 ± 0.7 . Before the use of TF the biological age of the group differed from chronological by -4.2 ± 0.6 years. The majority of men demonstrated a decrease in the functional activity of endocrine and of immune systems' as well as hyperfunction of the liver and of urinary bladder and hypofunction pancreatic.

Results: The study showed that initially disturbed body system functions were significantly normalized. After the course of TF treatment the difference between biological and chronological age was $(-8.2) \pm 0.5$ years ($p < 0.05$), which is a rejuvenation effect of 4 years.
