Best Answer: Nobody on here can recommend to you the safest treatment. You need to speak to the physician who diagnosed you with cancer.

There are many treatments for prostate cancer including chemotherapy and radiotherapy.

I agree, cancer at any stage is too serious to afford not undergoing treatment proposed by a doctor. Although I can understand that you might want to get it in the least invasive way for your all body.

In my opinion chemotherapy is more invasive then radiotherapy and therapies where only certain part of the body is exposed to radiation. There are also therapies where certain chemicals introduced to the body are activated to toxic drugs only in the conditions of hypoxia (significantly lowered concentration of oxygen characteristic to tumors)... researchers are doing a lot of efforts to discover new drugs that should be as noninvasive to the whole system as possible. However, every type of cancer is a bit different, may be cured in a different way and this is definitely the doctor's job to find the most suitable treatment.

For faster recovery from treatments and bringing your immune system to balance I recommend purely natural supplement Flavon max, many cancer patients observed not only faster recovery after treatment but also some of them experienced improvement while waiting for chemotherapy and supplementing their diet with that fruit extract. The doctor should obviously be consulted whether he doesn't see any contraindications. Those supplements contain high content of bioflavonoids that play preventive role in development of cancer cells. More info about Flavon products at <http://flavon.org.uk>
