"We have exhausted our other options, and my son was still struggling. After failing 2 sessions of summer school, and having to repeat 7th grade, we had to try something different.

He is able to multi-task now. He is getting to his homework with less prompting. I see him being more confident in doing his homework without help. Last year, we had a tutor for at least one hour every school day, This year only 2 hours per week. We have less combativeness in general."

"Our 11 YO daughter has been struggling at school, behind her grade level since kindergarten. She has had any number of support systems in place, and motivating her to stay focused and on task was a challenge. Remind her of homework or encouraging her to prepare for tests usually ended in frustration and resistance.

Since early on in the program Minna has been more responsive to questions. Answering them without delay. Previously I always suspected she was trying to determine how to answer the question, even yes, no questions. As if the answer might make me upset or I might ask her a follow up question. She seemed to dread answering anything. The delay in response was frustrating. Now, there is very little delay. She has recently been self-motivated to study and prepare for classes. She takes advantage of time she has to get her work done, before playing instead of procrastinating. She is reading more on her own and she does not seem to be generally frustrated with life or getting things done."

"ADHD and lack of focus and sleep. With what I learned here I've overcome all my problems with ADHD lack of focus and sleep, how? Because breathing is important and at time when you don't think "I always had a hard time focusing and keeping with a plan in my personal and school life.

I feel like I have the skills and knowledge problems with ADHD lack of focus and sleep, how? Because breathing is important and at time when you don't think about it, the next few breaths you take to think will help you think more clearly of what you're attempting to overcome!!"

school life.

I feel like a I have the skills and knowledge to be a productive person. Even though I inevitably get distracted sometimes, it doesn't control me anymore."

"He was struggling in school with focus and staying on task at the end of 6th grade. He also struggled with impulsivity which was causing him not to make good choices. I had to keep him home from school several days at the end of the school year because he was making such poor choices

He is doing much better in school now in fact after his first treatment he said that he felt normal for the first time. Also he missed a few weeks of treatment due to vacation and illness and the emails from teachers started again about him making poor choices and having a difficult time staying on task which had not been an issue all year."
