em.hening Two years ago today he walked into that building with a trash bag full of reds & completed his exit interview. I remember him walking out screaming "I'm free" 🥹👏 with his arms waving in the air Months spent apart with him on hitch
Holidays spent alone
A relationship sustained on FaceTime
Loneliness Frustration
You name it we struggled with it.
Having a spouse work out of town is not for the faint of heart 💔 But on this day it felt like a dream come true, he was coming home for • g o o d • completely failing network marketing business I never thought I'd be the women who could actually "retire" their husband. I saw the posts for years, I saw the full time families at home everyday but I didn't know if was capable.

I pushed anyways, I saw that glimmer of hope because I knew this company and compensation was unmatched to anything else I'd seen.

When he was on hitch I spent all day working, all day training, all day leading my team. We were sharing a vehicle at the time, 70k + in debt, and I didn't leave the house for 14 days straight until he came home. I always get asked how success happened for me, it's because I didn't have a choice. I wanted our situation to change so bad wanted our situation to change so bad that when I finally found an opportunity I believed in I did not stop 🙌 At the bottom of every post I used to say "#bringinghimhome" and I fought for it everyday until it became a reality ☐ My vision has never been mundane or ordinary, I've always wanted to lead a life different than the way society thought I was supposed to. So on that day when my income had surpassed his ten fold & we had paid off all of our debt, we decided it was time for him to come home so we could live life • t o g e t h e r •

Since that day we've been that full time family I always dreamed of. We've hand picked how we want each day to look. We wake up next to each other every morning and fall asleep next to each other every night. We have traveled the

Since that day we've been that full time family I always dreamed of. We've hand picked how we want each day to look. We wake up next to each other every morning and fall asleep next to each other every night. We have traveled the world together. We have found freedom. All while still grinding and building this multi million dollar business from our phones. Today this is our (cont. in comments)

em.hening reality, and I wouldn't change a thing. Whoever is reading this I want to tell you to keep dreaming, please keep pushing for the reality you actually want not the one you're simply accepting. You. Are. So. Worthy. 🙌 your hands in the air screaming moment of happiness is within your reach. All it takes it starting and taking that one step you know you need to in the right direction and then you don't let off that gas pedal ❤️ When you've decided what you truly want, I promise nothing can stop you from getting there. Make today your day one, I can't wait to see where you are two years from today.
