Entrepreneurship is a wild ride and everyone's journey will be a different one. I had Rich Dad Poor Dad in my hands in 5th grade and freshman year I was getting thrown in the hallways because I had "Think Big and Kick Ass" and "How to Win Friends and Influence People" in the inside of my biology and chemistry textbooks.

From baking cookies in my moms kitchen at 15, packaging them up in zip lock baggies, selling them in the hallways at school for $1 a cookie to walking around the neighborhood at 12 years old with a shovel knocking door to door selling people on letting my knuckle head friends and I shovel the snow out of their freezing driveways... sales, marketing, & leadership was always in my DNA.

At 18 I got my real estate license and stole listing agents listings and re posted them on several websites as my own listings. Then prospective buyers and renters would call my phone & I would work the deal. They told me I was the youngest person ever to attend the "Real Estate Learning Center" in Arizona to obtain my license. I was sitting there post 2008 crash and the whole room was my parents age. I also created "Alex Morton Realty" and plastered it on shirts and flyers all over the campus. Which wasn't even a real company, only in my mind.

At 21 I paraded around the state, then country, & then the world convincing thousands (actually 96,000 total) to drink Vitamins, Essential Minerals, Mangosteen, & Aloe Vera juice and drinks. Literally had college campuses jacked up on "healthy caffeine" and setting goals / making money. Taught them to open their minds and think outside the societal norms. It sparked a revolution within millennials to think / act for themselves.

Everyone will have their own unique journey. Now, for the last 6 years I've been touring all over the world teaching people the science of achievement, art of fulfillment, how to create the life they desire, & how to learn new skills and multiply money in todays digital landscape.

Trust your gut / keep going / & you too can go from shoveling driveways of snow for $20 to never having to think about price tags again.

GO BE GREAT!!
