alexmortonmindset  Comparison is the thief of all joy. Why are you comparing your chapter 2 to someone else's chapter 22? Doesn't make sense and when you compare you take your weaknesses and put them up against someone else's strengths. Don't compare money, health, happiness, success to anyone except the older version of yourself. I used to do this and it dimmed the feeling of joy I would have in a particular moment. I remember hitting my first major milestones and then automatically comparing my results & feeling like I was moving too slow when in reality I was moving fast.

Strive to outperform yourself day after day and eventually you'll become the person you desire to be.

I can't compare my results to Grant Cardone, he's literally double my age. If you're in year 2 of network marketing you can't compare your success to mine in year 13, again, it'll only upset you. Continue to work on YOU. Learn from your mentors, coaches, etc... but don't idolize people. The only person I idolize is GOD because GOD is all knowing, omnipresent, & perfection.

Don't worry about how fast you're going.. just keep going. Develop that Don't worry about how fast you're going.. just keep going. Develop that long term vision. When I was doing 3 meetings a day, 7 days a week, sleeping on couches / floors / economy class plane rides at 21 years old I was playing the long game mentally. When our first company went down and everyone threw the towel in and kept going.. I was again mentally playing the long game. I am still playing the long game.. envisioning myself at 37 years old getting paid 100K a speech with a waiting list since I'll have made... you get the point.

One last thing. It's about results. That's it. Everything else is smoke, mirrors, and 🦌...

When push comes to shove it's HOW MUCH HAVE YOU EARNED & how many others have you helped. GC / EM / EW / GV / TR get what they get to show up because they've gotten the results. So get the freaking results and keep your head down. No one gives a damn about your 10/20/30 a month KEEP PUSHING and stop bragging. If I am too real then unfollow me. Truth hurts sometimes. Peace & ❤️
