We've all been there. The car breaks down. Your kid tells you about the upcoming prom. You find out your insurance isn't as good as you thought it was. You come home to find out your water heater is leaking.

Or maybe it's simpler than that. Your co-workers want to go out for drinks after work, and you're ordering water. Your kids want to stop for ice cream, but it's not in the budget this month. You'd really like to not brew your own coffee and stop at the coffee shop once in a while.

Social selling is an easy way to relieve that stress. Is there potential to bring in more than part-time $ with social

Social selling is an easy way to relieve that stress. Is there potential to bring in more than part-time $ with social selling? Absolutely. But the reality is that most people are doing it for just that - a little extra cash each month to be added to their budget. For the storms. To say "yes" more. An extra $100 a month = $1200 in a year.

What could you do with an extra $1200?
